“a deep melodic storm that takes you to the edge of the world”

*“Poignant and hauntingly beautiful, sung with an open heart” - You Call That Radio

*“Atmospheric Melancholy” Colonel John McMustard

UK alt-folk artist Martin Windebank breaks free from technology and sings a classical nature call to the modern world. 'For Mother Nature' out April 5th is the new single from his forthcoming album, slated for release November 2024.

The anthemic track has classical guitar at its heart centre and plays with the atmosphere of early Cohen and Morricone. Surrounded by an epically haunting chorus and Vangelic fanfare, Martins' sultry voice lays out the technological problems of the world, and dreams of a human solution. Harnessing vast strings and the power of the drum to voyage down to the depths and soar up to the stars.

Martin explains “Parts in a Factory, there's Plastic in the Sea, and Robots on TV. It is about how fixated people are on the technological narrative, rarely taking a moment to be in their own natural world “

Born of frustration with a failing computer, “For Mother Nature” is a blasphemous cry, defiant of a technocratic god, and contends with being bound to flawed technology, whilst knowing at heart that there is still a living world beyond the digital space, a world where unity, love and optimism could lead to humanities salvation.

For many years Martin Windebank has committed himself to his musical exploration, writing a great many songs and honing his stagecraft between several bands, and many solo live performances at Scottish music festivals, such as Belladrum, Eden, Kelburn and Knochengorroch. 'For Mother Nature' is his first official music release, with much more to come.
